Let us take a moment of silence to ask for a peaceful and lasting resolution to the conflict and violence that has escalated in the Middle East.

Dear God, we come to you with hearts of thankfulness this new day, for the blessings of our life from you that we so easily take for granted: for each ray of sunlight that provides life and warmth to the earth; for each drop of rain that nourishes the ground; for each breath of air that we are able to take this day; for each beat of our heart that pushes the lifeblood through our veins; for each word that we are able to speak today; and for each soul that is in this room who is given life by you. May we not take this day or each other for granted, and may we do this day's work with a spirit of hope and cooperation. We humbly ask this of you who are God forever and ever. Amen.

The chair recognized Representative Orr who led the house in the pledges of allegiance to the United States and Texas flags.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

SPEAKER PHELAN: Mr. Tinderholt, for what purpose?

REPRESENTATIVE TINDERHOLT: Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

SPEAKER: Mr. Tinderholt, before I entertain your parliamentary inquiry, I would like to read into the record for inclusion in the journal a statement to remind the body of the House Rules governing parliamentary inquiries. I find the Congressional Precedent cited on page 12 of the House Rules Manual for the 88th Legislature to be most helpful in providing guidance on this topic.

The precedent from the Congressional Record for March 21, 2010, reads as follows:

"Recognition for parliamentary inquiries is a matter committed to the discretion of the Chair. In exercising that discretion, the Chair endeavors to apply ordinary jurisprudential principles. A parliamentary inquiry should relate in some practical sense to the pending proceedings. It should not seek an advisory opinion. The Chair declines to respond to hypothetical questions, to questions not yet presented, and to requests to place pending proceedings in historical context.

"Members should not expect to engage the Chair in argument. A Member seeking to make a point on the merits of an issue—whether it is one of policy or one of process—may do so by engaging in debate. But a Member should not expect to have the presiding officer affirm or validate such a point."

I will continue to follow this precedent in fulfilling my duty to enforce the rules adopted by this House, and I ask the Members to do the same in preparing your parliamentary inquiries. Mr. Tinderholt, if you have a parliamentary inquiry that complies with this precedent, I will entertain your inquiry at this time.

TINDERHOLT: Mr. Speaker, basically what you're saying is that historical precedent doesn't matter at this point? Because I've been here 10 years and we could do parliamentary inquiries on potentially pending things that we would like to do.

SPEAKER: Mr. Tinderholt, that is not a proper parliamentary inquiry. You have been repeatedly advised that your parliamentary inquiries are not proper and you have been repeatedly advised of the requirements under our rules and precedents. In light of your long history of refusing to comply with those requirements, the Chair has no choice but to interpret your persistent violation of the rules as both willful and dilatory. Accordingly, before entertaining any further parliamentary inquiries from you this session, you will have to come down front and visit with the Chair or the parliamentarians to ensure that your proposed inquiries do not violate the rules and that the rules adopted by this body are respected. At this time, the Chair declines to entertain further inquiries from you, Mr. Tinderholt.
